

HUMAN COMPUTING'S OPPENHEIMER QUESTION

Jonathan Zittrain

Berkman Center for Internet and Society
Harvard University
Cambridge, MA
zittrain@law.harvard.edu

ABSTRACT

Platforms for distributed labor offer the efficiency of breaking large tasks into discrete pieces, often in ways that obscure the purpose of the whole to which a piece contributes. When should clickworkers seek and accept responsibility for the ethical valence of a task commissioner's aims, especially when a task does not signal anything about its larger purpose?